designed to raise the maximum contract benefit that could be written without special permission of the insurance department, from $150 to $250. It was pointed out on the floor that the burial associations operate on a large scale in the densely populated negro sections of the state, but also have many white contract holders. Familiar names of various burial associations were frequently referred to by the members, including "Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise," "the Jakes," and The bill's supporters asserted Sillers of Bolivar countered with the assertion that some of the associations made contracts for "fancy" burials, including expensive caskets, embalming, elaborate robes and a big hearse. These, he said, could not be furnished if the contracts were limited to $150. Chairman Sam Anderson of the insurance committee suggested that even under the bill as written the maximum contract could be boosted to the amount set in the amendment, "if the funeral-buying public of Mississippi so Kees of Copiah charged "it was desired. Wolfe of Bolivar urged that the bill be killed, declaring more than 30,000 Mississippians belong to such organizations and are satisfied with present rules. On a viva voce vote the amendment was killed and the house then passed the bill after spend-ing more time debating it than they spent approving more than

Mississippi House Debates Saturday Over the Question Of Just How Much an Association Funeral Should Cost

JACKSON, Miss., May 14 (AP)-The Mississippi house of representatives, for a solid hour today, lost itself in an old-fashioned debate on just exactly how much a burial association funeral, with all the trimmings, should cost. Two figures were advanced, one calling for $150 and the other $250. The solons finally decided that $150 was plenty.

The house stood solidly in favor of the bill, which is aimed to accomplish more rigid regulation of burial associations by the state insurance commission, as shown by the final vote, but split sharply over a committee amendment contract benefit that could be written without special permission of the insurance department, from $150 to $250.

It was pointed out on the floor that the burial associations operate on a large scale in the densely populated negro sections of the state, but also have many white contract holders.

Familiar names of various burial associations were frequently referred to by the members, including "Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise," "the Jakes," and

The bill's supporters asserted that poor people, by payment of themselves a decent burial. Everything went along smoothly until the amendment was offered to "up" the contract limit. Then the fireworks started.

Kees of Copiah charged "it was an attempt to permit burial associations to raise their rates." Sillers of Bolivar countered with the assertion that some of the associations made contracts for "fancy" burials, including expensive caskets, embalming, elaborate robes and a big hearse.

These, he said, could not be fur-

As the secret and complicated story of the various private negotiations for the return of the Lindbergh baby was unfolded to officials, they strove to learn whether the men who kidnaped and killed the child, the men who received the $50.000, and the men who were negotiating with Curtis -might not all have been members of the same gang-even the same men. New Clue Found.

Meanwhile, a new clue was an-nounced—dirty burlap sack. It was picked up about 50 feet from the improvised grave five miles infant's battered body was discov-

It was taken carefully to police headquarters to be examined in the hope it might in some way throw more light on the strange case, One theory was that the child might

the sack, this theory might gain weight. Hope of finding some other clue led officials to have all leaves, twigs and surface dirt, for a large radius around where the body was found, scraped up and taken to the Lindbergh garage. When the collection dries, chemists will analyze and study it.

Curtis remained on the Lindbergh estate to aid by whatever means possible in the hunt for the men he had believed were the kidnapers. Most of Thursday night he spent telling officials the long story of his over part of the ground he covered during his work in Colonel Lind-bergh's behalf.

that this gang furnished the Virginian with a picture purporting to have been taken of the Lindbergh baby while he was their captive, and also have demanded $200,000 for the baby's return. Another of the intermediaries in the

Meanwhile, a new clue was announced-dirty burlap sack. It was picked up about 50 feet from the improvised grave five miles

It was taken carefully to police headquarters to be examined in the hope it might in some way throw more light on the strange case.

One theory was that the child might have been killed somewhere else and the body transported in the bag to the heavily wooded section where it was found.

If traces of blood were found on the sack, this theory might gain weight.

Hope of finding some other clue led officials to have all leaves, twigs and surface dirt, for a large radius around where the body was found, scraped up and taken to the Lindbergh garage. When the collection dries, chemists will analyze and study it.

Curtis remained on the Lindbergh estate to aid by whatever n sible in the hunt for the men he had believed were the kidnapers.

OUR AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

It seems incredible that any American community could be so obsessed with the blatancies of commercialism that its people would be led to gloat over any material advantages brought to them through the purely fortuitous circumstances incident to a beastly crime. Yet this is one of the phases which accentuate a revelation of national hypocrisy as we study the significance of the Lindbergh tragedy.

Hopewell, N. J., whose chief function has been to serve as a dateline for news stories of one of the most atrocious episodes in modern American history, rises to gloat over the "prosperity" which the ghastly chain of circumstances has brought to it. The Hopewell Herald for Wednesday, March 9, a few days following the kidnaping of Charles Lindbergh, Jr., carried a story with a headline reading: "Lindbergh Tragedy Brings Hopewell Worldwide Renown." There is little actual news of the kidnaping, but we learn in the second sentence that "the name of Hopewell" has become "the byword of this nation and has been translated through the press in the German, French. Chinese, Russian and every language in the world." We learn further that "the crime has brought on the biggest newspaper scoop in the history of journalism, not excepting the World war," and that "famous writers, radio announcers, detectives and men of worldwide reputation are daily rubbing shoulders with this now nationally known town."

This is amusing and a little pathetic, and streaked with vulgar provincialism. There is something more invidious, however, in what follows, which gives occasion for the critical sneers of Europeans when they discuss what they call, not without accuracy, "American civilization." Here is our vaunted civilization:

"Without attempting to commercialize the Lindbergh abduction, it is a truthful assertion to say that the business in Hopewell has been more than doubled in the past week. And the effect of this incident in the months and years to come is considered by many to be one that will be welcomed by Hopewell in that the town will show marked progress and will be a place of national reputation.'

Quite as though the town had suddenly "struck oil" or discovered a gold mine! Added to this exhibition of the "world's worst taste," as it is described by a writer in "Wilson's Bulletin." a literary publication, is "the world's worst poem," which develops the same theme. Here are a few of the verses, printed under the heading, "For the Love of a Child":

> "Announcing over the radio, Television and telegraph. It's funny it took a tragedy To put Hopewell on the map.

"The depression is all over, There's work for every man. The stores get a dollar and a half For just a pound of ham.

"The town is now a bright spot, Business we know will thrive; Everyone will soon be rich On account of a little child.'

Further comment is superfluous. In itself the circumstance is either a reflection of our provincial ignorance or our blase complacency which grasps even the sordid episodes of life as grist for the mills of American commercialism. In any event, it is a terrible commentary on the where the Money Went superficialism and hypocrisy of our modern life.

DO IT NOW!

(Editorial from the Birmingham Post)

Wet victories in the Ohio and Indiana primaries hasten the national march away from prohibition. Ohio, the mother of presidents and mother of the Anti-Saloon league, is a key state. Indiana is the state that had the most drastic dry laws.

This general reaction against an experiment which started with noble purpose and ended ignobly, is now barbed with sharp economic necessity. Prohibition enforcement swells the federal deficit and at the same time robs the government of revenue with which to balance the budget and relieve the over-burdened taxpayer.

Those hit by the tax bill are not asking to be spared. The movies, the rubber industry, the automobile industry, the insurance companies-the whole long list.

And make no mistake about it, they are hit, and hit hard-at a time when any extra expense whatsoever is an inch off the end of the nose.

Life or death for many of the industries is in the provisions of the tax bill; ife if the tax is only all that the traffic will bear; the death sentence is be yond that. And the death means to the government that the goose that lays the golden egg is no more, that the thing the bill seeks to accomplish is nullified by the bill itself. A beer tax would bring in from $375,000,000 to $500,000,000 per year. Think what that would do! It is a greater sum than the present proposed taxes on amusements, radio and phonographs, and communications combined. It is from one-third to one-half the total tax bill.

Big Budget-Balancing Act

By RODNEY DUTCHER, NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON.-If you can follow the statistics that are being hurled about ad lib during the big budget-balancing act, you are doing better than many of us who are here on the ground.

You tuck a statistic away somewhere for safekeeping overnight and next norning you're as likely to find it a totally different statistic, swollen enormously or shrunken to a mere shadow of its former self.

That disconcerting capriciousness of the darned things may be observed in everything from the treasury's estimates of deficits and of returns from specific new taxes and various estimates to be saved through reorganizations to the wild, phoney figures often tossed about on the floor of congress and the seems to me disgraceful. Much of it governmental policy. He came to the information broadcast to the country about the post-war jumps in govern-

About That Budget Cut

The casual reader certainly must blink to read one day President Hoover's hot message to congress implying that it isn't going to effect any economies at all and the very next day to read that by virtue of cuts already made and apparently about to be made there's a slash of $833,000,000 under the 1932 budget in sight. (Don't ask just how it's going to turn out.)

On a Tuesday night you find Congressman Arthur M. Fess of California warning that local-state-federal expenditures of 13 billion dollars are eating up one-sixth of the national income which he sets at 78 billions and the next night Editor Phil Hanna of the Chicago Journal of Commerce, broadcasting for the American Taxpavers' league, has the national income considerably below 50 billions for 1932 and a 15-billion dollar tax bill eating 30 cents out of every income dollar. Both ask you to wire your congressman.

One refreshing set of figures however, has come from the budget bureau. It shows exactly the activities for which federal expenses in the past decade have materially increased. It was compiled for Congressman Phil Swing of California, who wanted to answer a widely circulated letter from the du Pont de Nemours company in its vigorous campaign to bring pressure on congress for expense reduction by cutting out certain government func-

This Looked Bad

Deducting interest, sinking fund and certain other payments, the du Ponts cited an increase of from $1,964,000,000 in 1927 to $3,195,100,000 for 1932, an increas eof $1,231,100,000 spent by major departments, bureaus and commissions, The difference sounded pretty bad and seemed like riotous extravagance.

But the picture is out of proportion, regardless of how badly we need The year 1927 was the lowest since 1917 while 1932 was the largest-and most of the increase was represented by efforts of congress for things that would stimulate employment. Expenditures for public works alone had increased from $188,000,000 to $623,000,000, for highways, public buildings, rivers and harbors and flood control work. Other construction activities accounted Increases beside that of 435 millions on public works, the budget bureau shows, included 165 millions for the agricultural marketing fund-so-called farm relief. 167 millions for postal deficit. 75 millions for ship construction in the navy and through shipping board loans, 47 millions for aircraft construction and aeronautical activities, 246 millions for veterans, and 37 millions for settling under the war claims act.

Most of the other 69 millions of increase went for agricultural aid, department of justic law enforcement, better prisons and completing the 1930 census.

A Better Comparison

The increase in the budget for 1933, which the budget bureau suggests as a better year for comparison, was only about $772,000,000 over 1927. It breaks down into an increase of 273 millions for public works, 15 millions for agriculture, 128 millions for postal deficiency, 45 millions for vessel construction, 36 millions for aircraft and aeronautics and 243 millions for veterans, leaving a Sooner or later, of course, the whole problem will be balance of only 32 millions in small increases throughout the departments for Draw your own inferences. Those statistics, at least, will give you a such clearer picture of where the money has been going than you'll get from the superficial propagandists. Those fellows dare not attack public works, keeps growing that in the end Uncle Sam will be found farm and veteran relief, aviation and ship subsidies. They'd rather have you holding a capacious, wide-mouthed and totally empty bag. I think congress pours the money into a hole.

Howe About Everything

By E. W. HOWE

There are actually a good many sensible features in the present Soviet government in Russia. The idea that no public afficial should receive more than $150 a month is sound; so is the habit of promptly punishing officials when they are dishonest or negligent.

. . But the determination to live by communist principles will wreck Sovietism. Communism is so palpably weak in so many respects it cannot ucceed. The objection to the teaching of Karl Marx is it will not fit human needs. The poor man is entitled to justice; but so is the man who refuses to remain poor. And in the human experiment there has never been found a tribe of men wherein the majority were willing to remain in perpetual poverty. Nature provided means for all to become wellto-do, and the better specimens of men will not consent to forever remaining uncomfortable when comfort abounds, and may be easily attained by not unreasonable effort. I may not e here to see the end of the Russian experiment, but let younger men remember the prediction that comnunism must be given up there. Like whisky, it is a fool: it will not stand

In my town there is a woman who was very tough. She has a daughter, and is stricter with her than any other mother in town. . . . Negroes are very disagreeable in bothering whites for gifts. I have spent the present winter in an apart~ nent house in Miami, Florida, and have found everything satisfactory except my failure to satisfy the negro servants. An old fellow living nearby is so much annoyed that he will not let a negro maid come in: he does his own cleaning up, and I often go over to enjoy his indignation. I have been swhipped into submission, but admire a man brave enough to rebel in a good cause. . . . The poor whites are as bad as the negroes in begging. About the only real vigor shown in the United States during the past winter has been displayed in begging campaigns. Inspired by the success of the United States in the field of arbitration the Washington showed his good faith nations of the world in 1899 set up by negotiating an arbitration agreeganization and procedure in 1907. Notwithstanding these difficulties The Hague tribunal has succeeded grow into habits a woman must have in settling about twenty cases, in five of which the United States was involved. OUR AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

It seems incredible that any American community could be so obsessed with the blatancies of commercialism that its people would be led to gloat over any material advantages brought to them through the purely fortuitous circumstances incident to a beastly crime. Yet this is one of the phases which accentuate a revelation of national It's only a matter of time. In what amounts to a stampede, the political drys hypocrisy as we study the significance of the Lindbergh | are turning wet.

Hopewell, N. J., whose chief function has been to serve as a dateline for news stories of one of the most atrocious episodes in modern American history, rises to gloat over the "prosperity" which the ghastly chain of circumstances has brought to it. The Hopewell Herald for Wednesday, March 9, a few days following the kidnaping of Charles Lindbergh, Jr., carried a story with a headline reading: "Lindbergh Tragedy Brings Hopewell Worldwide Renown." There is little actual news of the kidnaping, but we learn in the second sentence that "the name of Hopewell" has become "the byword of this nation and has been translated through the press in the German, French, Chinese, Russian and every language in the world." We learn further that "the crime has brought on the biggest newspaper scoop in the history of journalism, not excepting the World war," and that "famous writers, radio announcers, detectives and men of worldwide reputation are daily rubbing shoulders with this now nationally known town."

This is amusing and a little pathetic, and streaked with vulgar provincialism. There is something more invidious, however, in what follows, which gives occasion for the critical sneers of Europeans when they discuss what they call, not without accuracy, "American civilization." Here ously or shrunken to a mere shadow of its former self. is our vaunted civilization:

"Without attempting to commercialize the Lindbergh abduction, it is a truthful assertion to say that the business in Hopewell has been more than doubled in the past week. And the effect of this incident in the months and years to come is considered by many to be one that will be welcomed by Hopewell in that the town will show marked progress and will be a place of national reputation."

"world's worst taste," as it is described by a writer in "Wilson's Bulletin," a literary publication, is "the world's warning that local-state-federal expenditures of 13 billion dollars are eating worst poem," which develops the same theme. Here are a few of the verses, printed under the heading, "For the the American Taxpayers' league, has the national income considerably below Love of a Child":

"Announcing over the radio, Television and telegraph, It's funny it took a tragedy To put Hopewell on the map.

"The depression is all over, There's work for every man, The stores get a dollar and a half For just a pound of ham.

"The town is now a bright spot, Business we know will thrive; Everyone will soon be rich On account of a little child."

In any event, it is a terrible commentary on the Where the Money Went superficialism and hypocrisy of our modern life.

And make no mistake about it, they are hit, and hit hard-at a time when any extra expense whatsoever is an inch off the end of the nose.

Life or death for many of the industries is in the provisions of the tax bill; ife if the tax is only all that the traffic will bear; the death sentence is beyond that. And the death means to the government that the goose that lays the golden egg is no more, that the thing the bill seeks to accomplish is nullified by the bill itself. So it is no more than natural and human that cries

And while all this is going on, the thing which would relieve all, the thing which would save industry from being taxed to death, lies before us-unused. Congress, the congress which is doing the taxing, has the power to amend the Volstead act. By such an amendment, a tax on beer can be levied. A beer tax would bring in from $375,000,000 to $500,000,000 per year. Think what that would do! It is a greater sum than the present proposed taxes on amusements, radio and phonographs, and communications combined. It is from one-third to one-half the total tax bill.

Big Budget-Balancing Act

One refreshing set of figures, however, has come from the budget bureau. It shows exactly the activities for which federal expenses in the past decade have materially increased. Communism is so palpably weak in so many respects it cannot succeed. The objection to the teaching of Karl Marx is it will not fit human needs. The poor man is entitled to justice; but so is the man who refuses to remain poor. And in the human experiment there has never been found a tribe of men wherein the majority were willing to remain in perpetual poverty. Nature provided means for all to become wellto-do, and the better specimens of men will not consent to forever remaining uncomfortable when comfort abounds, and may be easily attained by not unreasonable effort. We feel justified in pointing with pride to what we have to offer:

In personnel we combine in harmonious cooperation the noise and wisdom born only of age and experience with the splendid enthusiasm and vitality of youth. Our operatives are trained and heensed by the state of Louisiana and our lady attendant is a graduate nurse.

Our equipment is the latest and best that money can buy and our stock of supplies full, complete, and of a range to suit the financial standing of our clients.

Our Home is entirely free from the coldly commercial atmosphere of the ordinary "Funeral Chapel" or "Mortuary Department," and is permeated by the sense of sacred peace.

KING STAGES FINE STRETCH DRIVE TO NOSE OUT TICK ON

Bradley Thoroughbred Is Third to Win Both Derby and Preakness

By Orlo Robertson (Associated Press Sports Writer) BALTIMORE, Md., May 14.-Burgoo

King, a royally bred son of the blue grass, moved into the select circle of great thoroughbreds as he capped his Kentucky Derby victory with a driving triumph in the forty-second running of the Preakness at Pimlico

Coming from behind to nab the decision in the closing strides, the E.R. Bradley coit equalled the performances of the mighty Sir Barton and the great Gallant Fox, heretofore the only two horses that ever won both the Derby and the Preakness.

The King, meeting eight crack eastern three-year-olds, was a great horse in his victory. Running over a track at least a second slow, he came within one and four fifths seconds of equalling the track record as he receled off the one and three-sixteenths miles in 1:59 4/5.

A crowd of 40.000, said to be the Tick On, the favorite, and Walter M. Jefford's Boatswain, an outsider, in the final stride. Only a head separated the King and Tick On at the finish while a like distance behind was Boatswain, a son of Man-o'-War. which won the race in 1920.

The victory, carrying with it a purse of $50,375, hoosted the King's total earnings in eight days to $102.-690. Backers of the Bradley green and white silks received $5.50, $5.00 and $4.00 across the board. The favorite, Tick On, paid $3.50 to place while a show ticket on Boatswain returned

Florrid Will Oppose Braly in Final Game of Series This Afternoon

By George V. Lofton

The Twins staged another ninth inning rally yesterday but the Refiners had piled up too big a lead and Frank Meyer's crew won the second game of the current series by a score off 11 to 8. Port Arthur moved up out of the cellar as a result of the victory.

It was quite a slugfest and as far as hitting was concerned, the Twins came out on top. Monroe made 16 hits to 13 for Port Arthur but the local batsmen failed to produce in the pinches. In fact, twelve Monroe runners were left stranded on the paths. The Twins made it miserable for Jeff Isbell, the young southpaw who pitched for the Refiners during the first eight and one-third innings, by bunting 'em at him on all sides. In

NEW ORLEANS, May 14. - The United States Davis cup tennis team drove its way into the finals of the North American zone play today by winning its third straight match from Mexico.

Johnny Van Ryn and Wilmer Allison defeated Ricardo Tapia and Alfonso Unda, 6-1, 6-2, 3-6, 9-7, in the doubles match filled with the spar-kling play of the youthful Tapia. The gallery of 1500 was on the edge of the seats during the last two sets and applauded both teams as they left the Tapia was a last minute substitute for Eduardo Mestre in the Mexican doubles pair, Ernesto Lopez, nonplaying captain ,said he believed the Tapia-Unda combination his strongest. Mexico's only hope lay in a victory in the doubles. The Mexicans would have had to win today's doubles and tomorrow's singles in order to turn back the Americans.

In the North American zone finals later this month the Americans will meet the Australians who today won their third straight victory over the Cubans at Havana.

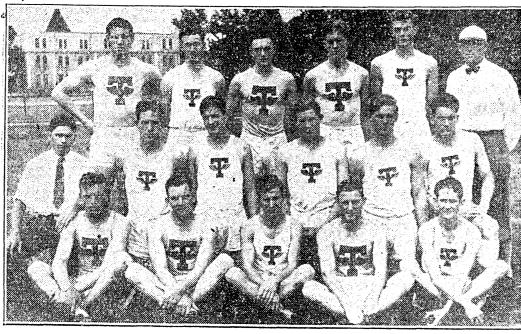

After overwhelming the Mexicans in the first two sets, the Americans before they realized it, found the third one snatched up by the Mexicans. The latter had calmed from the excitement of the opening play. On their part the Americans let down on their attack, and their opponents quickly took the offense with an attack that would not be stopped.

YANKEE VETERAN BLANKS WHITE SOX

George Pipgras Holds Chicago to Four Hits, Winning Second Shutout

Pipgras, veteran Yankee hurler, pitched his second shutout in a row today, blanking the Chicago White Sox 6 to 0 in the only game of the series the weather let the teams play. It was a brilliant performance that carried Pipgras' streak to 19 scoreless innings and the Yankees to their fifth straight victory. Until two were out in the ninth, the Sox got only two hits, both in the fourth inning. Then Pipgras eased up, gave two hits and walked a man to fill the bases. In that tough spot he forced Red Kress, moved to the cleanup position for Chicago, to fly out and end the game,

Explosion Shot Safest Recovery From Bunker which might be attempted afford Should Be Unhurried

> The accompanying photograph illustrates several things of importance in playing an explosive shot. Unless the lie of the ball be such that an unusually vicious blow is required, it is not necessary to spread the feet any farther than would be done in playing a pitch of ordinary length. Because the shot is termed explosive does not mean that it must always as the ball, dashes his club into the sand behind the ball, and lets it go at that. The stroke should be longnever short and hurried-and the blow must go through the sand and through the ball. The action of the hands and wrists should be just as free as in any other stroke, and the backswing should be just as leisurely. A most important point is the angle of the club face shown clearly in this photograph. To begin with, the club used should always be a niblic with plenty of loft, and even this should be laid well back. The increased loft thus obtained provides the greatest possible margin for success. If a fair amount of sand be taken, there is little likelihood of sending the ball far past the hole, and at the same time the player feels confidence to hit hard enough to be certain of getting fighting ability comes only out of the bunker.

THE PRINCESS AND THE PAUPER

Once there was a girl and a boy who sometimes played together. The boy lived in one town and the girl in another town. The boy lived in a small house on a hill. When the girl would get up in the towers she could see the boy's house. She would signal from the towers. One move of her handkerchief meant, I'm coming over. Two moves with a pause between meant, you are to come over here. She would always wave at eight o'clock in the morning. Sometimes she would wave three times which meant dead day. The boy fixed up a pole and made

NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans has been called the most interesting city in America.

One thing that makes it so interesting is the fact that above Canal street is a modern city, with skyscrapers I'd and everything that any up-to-date I'd city has, and below Canal street, is the old French Quarter, with its narrow streets, and old-fashioned houses with balconies of iron festooned with fruits and flowers.

New Orleans has the largest sugar refinery in the world, also the largest mahogany lumber plant. It has the only plant for making celoten out of sugar cane waste, also the largest canning plant for cane syrup in the world. There are many other factories and mills. New Orleans has two universities. Tulane and Loyola, and a very fine

THE PRINCESS AND THE PAUPER

Once there was a girl and a boy who sometimes played together. The boy lived in one town and the girl in another town. Only in summer when she would come to the town where he lived to see her aunt did they get to play with each other. Her aunt lived in a big house with towers and a very pretty garden around it. The boy lived in a small house on a hill. When the girl would get up in the towers she could see the boy's house. She would signal from the towers. One move of her handkerchief meant, I'm coming over. Two moves with a pause between meant, you are to come over here. She would always wave at eight o'clock in the morning. Sometimes she would wave three times which meant dead day.

The boy fixed up a pole and made a red flag and a blue flag. The red one meant all right, the blue one meant got to work. He then fixed a black flag which meant I'm heartbroken.

One summer the boy was fourteen years old and the girl was thirteen years old. One day the girl waved three times which meant dead day. Then the boy jut up the black flag which meant I'm heartbroken. Then o'clock, Mary had to go to bed for she ran to the boy's house and found she was just a little girl ten years the boy whistling merrily. She teased old. LOUISIANA CROPS MAKING PROGRESS

But Mid-March Freeze Set Peaches Back, Lionel Janes' Report Says

Louisiana crops generally are mak-ing satisfactory progress, but, the expected as compared with 352,000 bushels produced last year.

The sugar cane crop is reported excellent, rice is delayed by dry weather and the truck crops now are making good progress.

There is an oversupply of laborers, said the report, with 175 farm laborers available for every 100 jobs. The farmers, said Mr. Janes, are doing all work possible with home hands and employing as few outside laborers as possible.

His report on Louisiana follows: At the beginning of May this year, crops were generally making fair progress, but averaged somewhat later than usual. The freeze in March severely damaged oats and pasture grasses. About 60 per cent of the rice sowing this season was accomplished by May 1, as compared with 75 per cent sown to May 1, 1931, and 79 per cent sown to May 1, 1930. Some resowing of rice has been necessary this season. Sugar cane is growing well and promises a very satisfactory yield per acre this sea-

The condition of oats in Louisiana on May 1, 1932, was 51 per cent of normal, comparing with a condition of 80 per cent on May 1, 1931; 69 per cent on May 1, 1930; and with 68 per cent the 5-year average of condition on May 1 (1924-1928). This year about 65 per cent of the crop is fall sown and 20 per cent spring sown. In 1930, 50 per cent of the crop was fall sown and 50 per cent was spring sown.

The stocks of all hay on farms May 1, 1932, are estimated at 71.000 tons, compared with 14,000 tons on hand May 1, 1931; 27,000 tons on hand May 1, 1930; and with 26,000 tons the 5-year average of stocks on hand May 1 (1924-1928).

The condition of tame hay meadows on May 1, 1932, was 67 per cent of normal, comparing with 79 per cent May 1, 19'; 68 per cent May 1, 1930; and with 83 per cent the 10-year average of condition on May 1, (1919

The condition of early Irish potatoes on May 1, 1932, was 69 per cent of normal, comparing with 85 per 1 (1924-1928). This condition figure covers the crop being grown for home use as well as the commercial crop. The condition of peaches on May

The farm labor supply was 118 per cent compared with normal, and the farm labor demand was 68 per cent of normal on May 1. The ratio of the percentage of supply to demand shows the supply to be 174 per cent of the demand. This figure indicates that there were 174 farm workers available for every one hundred jobs. The supply was 141 per cent of the demand on May 1, 1930.

The average daily production per cow of milk cows in herds kept by correspondents of the bureau amounted to 7.1 pounds on May 1. 1932, compared with 7.2 pounds one month ago; 9.1 pounds May 1, 1931; 8.0 pounds May 1, 1930; and with 7.8 pounds the 5-year average of production on May 1, (1925-1929),

LOUISIANA CROPS MAKING PROGRESS

But Mid-March Freeze Set Peaches Back, Lionel Janes' Report Says

Louisiana crops generally are makmid-March freeze caused quite a set-back in the peach crop, states the crop report issued by Lionel M. Janes, agricultural statistician, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U. S. department of agriculture, and received yesterday by E. R. Strahan, Ouachita parish farm agent.

The sugar cane crop is reported excellent, rice is delayed by dry weather and the truck crops now are making good progress.

There is an oversupply of laborers, said the report, with 175 farm laborers available for every 100 jobs. The farmers, said Mr. Janes, are doing all work possible with home hands and employing as few outside laborers as possible.

The freeze in March severely damaged oats and pasture grasses. About 60 per cent of the rice sowing this season was accomplished by May 1, as compared with 75 per cent sown to May 1, 1931, and 79 per cent sown to May 1, 1930. Some resowing of rice has been necessary this season. Sugar cane is growing well and promises a very satisfactory yield per acre this sea-hind the new and amazing attempt that may shortly be made to lift the Lusitania bodily from the deep sea floor where she has rested for seventeen years. If the colossal project succeeds, maritime experts believe that the next decade will see the recovery of most of the $300,000,000 treasure estimated to have gone down with sinking ships to have gone down with sinking ships to Davy Jones's locker.

The idea of lifting the huge Lusitania to the sea surface originated with Giuseppi Bontempi, engineer and inventor of Grantwood, N. J. The startling scheme, if proved practicable, will crystalize a salvaging dream as old sea the Vikings. as the Vikings.

And Mr. Bontempi, through a series of experiments made with model ves-sels has convinced himself and many others that his stupendous engineering project will restore to the world the Lusitania's millions.

The details of the extraordinary salvaging attempt are simple, within the comprehension of ordinary lay-laymen. The inventor calls his system "Controlled Grappling Pontoons." These great, hollow pontoons are superim-posed upon a steel framework provided with gripping steel

This apparatus can be lowered into the sea to a depth of hundreds of feet. The sel by machinery on the salvaging vessel ready for lifting big pontoons are filled with highly compressed air compressed air and this will greatly aid in hauling the sunken ship to the surface, it is believed. The weight of the vessel locks the gripping jaws and they cannot be freed until the weight is removed. Once floated, the ship can be hauled to a drydock and the recovery of the treasure can then be accom-plished in safety to the workers.

The system worked perfectly on model ships sunk in large tanks, but only actual experience, of course, will demonstrate its efficiency on a ship with the dimensions and tonnege of the long lost Lugitania.

The torpedoed vessel lies ten miles off the Irish coast under a 240 foot depth of water. She is 757 feet long 767 feet long over all, and has a gross tonnage of 30,895.

This staggering weight, added to the tremendous water pressure the sai-vagers would have to onhat, gives some idea

The estimate of $5,000,000 that has been placed on the valuables on the steamship was made on the basis of the several millions in gold bullion known to have been aboard plus the currency and jewels of the pius the currency and jewels of the many wealthy passengers. These included 120 fich Americans, among whom were such well-known figures as Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Charles Frohman, theatrical manager, Elbert Hubbard, the author of "Little Journeys," and Charles Klein, playwright.

Plans for the date of the great ocean gold quest had not been announced at this writing, but Mr. Lake said he thought everything would be in readiness the latter part of the forthcoming Summer.

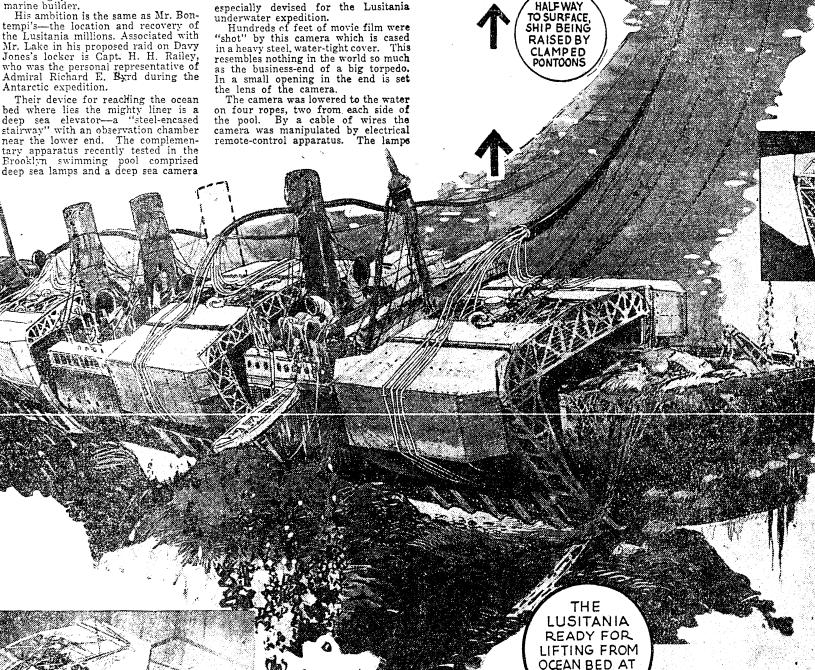

In charge of the actual diving work will be Frank Crilley, who holds the deep-sea diving record. Mr. Crilley set this mark in 1915 off Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, while helping to raise the sunken submarine, F-S.

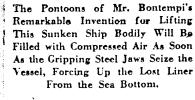

New recognition came to him in 1928 for his daring and brilliant achievements in connection with the raising of the S-4. Aiding Crilley in his work will be a group of the best tain Railey will broadcast a radio description of the event. There is no doubt that the adventure will be the most exciting underwater treasure quest that ever took place. When the divers emerge from the great tube they will probably use dynamite to blow off what remains of the super-structure. This would give them readier access to those parts of the steamer where the treasure is stored. It is the belief of Captain Turner, comthe world for the submarine fortune-hunters. Since the earliest days of commerce, countless thousands of vessels have gone to her cerulean floor.

who has centered his dreams on recovering the fortune lying in sunken ships is Capt. Harry L. Bowdoin, whose salvage ship, the Salvor, was ready at this writing to sail for a point off the Virginia Capes.

There lies the steamer Merida with $3,000,000 in gold aboard. She sank in a dense fog in May, 1911, after the liner, Admiral Farragut, rammed a hole in her side. Be-rammed a hole in her side. Be-sides the gold, there is said to be a fabulous amount of precious stones lying in the ship's safe. The Merida was bringing these gems back from Mexico at the time of the disaster.

Captain Bowdoin's divers will wear suits weighing 1,400 pounds apiece. The shoulders of these suits are equipped with powerful searchlights and the armor has great flexibility at all the necessary points.

necessary points.

But the principal advantage is that the divers wearing this cumbersome equipment can be lowered immediately to the salvage scenes and brought back as speedily as lifting equipment can handle the 1,400-pound suit.

The ingenious suit gives the diver the appearance and most of the qualities of a robot. Claws are fitted into each hand and worked from the inside. The movements of the "arms" and "legs" of the suit are

New and Astonishing Pontoon Grappling Device Which May Be Employed

Giuseppi Bontempi, Engineer-Inventor of Grantwood, New Jersey, Shown

Working on His Amazing New "Controlled Grappling Pontoon" Device, With Which He Hopes to Lift the Sunken Lusitania to the Sea Surface.

This is the glittering lure behind the new and amazing attempt that may shortly be made to lift the Lusitania bodily from the deep sea floor where she has rested for seventeen years. If the colossal project succeeds. maritime experts believe that the next decade will see the recovery of most of the $300,000,000 treasure estimated to have gone down with sinking ships to Davy Jones's locker.

The idea of lifting the huge Lusitania to the sea surface originated with Giuseppi Bontempi, engineer and inventor of Grantwood, N. J. The startling scheme, if proved practicable, will crystalize a salvaging drawn and will crystalize a salvaging dream as old as the Vikings.

And Mr. Bontempi, through a series of experiments made with model ves-sels has convinced himself and many others that his stupendous engineering project will restore to the world the Lusitania's millions. The details of the extraordinary salvaging attempt are simple, within the comprehension of ordinary lay-laymen. The inventor calls his system "Con-

great, hollow ponare superimposed upon a steel framework provided with gripping steel This apparatus can be lowered into the jaws are locked about the vessel by machinery on the salvaging vessel far above. When far above. When ready for lifting the big pontoons are filled with highly compressed air and this will greatly aid in hauling the sunken ship to the surface, is believed. The weight of the vessel locks the gripping jaws and they cannot be freed until the weight is removed. Once floated, the ship can be hauled to a drydock and the recovery of the treasure can then be accom-plished in safety to the workers. The system worked perfectly on model ships sunk in large tanks, but only actual experience, of course, will demonstrate its efficiency on a ship with the dimensions and tonnage of the long lost Lusitania.

The torpedoed vessel lies ten miles off the Irish coast under a 240 foot depth of water. She is 787 feet long over all, and has a gross tonnage of 30,395.

This staggering weight, added to the tremendous water pressure the salvagers would have to combat, gives some idea of the magnitude of the engineering operations necessary to lift the great liner from her watery grave. Eleven hundred and thirty-four persons lost their lives when the Lusitania was torpedoed on May 17, 1915. Her carrying capacity was 2,198 passengers and a crew of 850. A total of 1,959 souls were Her carrying capacity on board when her last voyage

The estimate of $5,000,000 that has been placed on the valuables on the steamship was made on the basis of the several millions in gold bullion known to have been aboard plus the currency and jewels of the many wealthy passengers. These included 120 rich Americans, among whom were such wellknown figures as Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Charles Frohman, theatrical manager, Elbert Hubbard, the author of "Little Journeys," and Charles Klein, playwright.

The submerged $5,000,000—ransom enough for a hundred kings and emperors—has been the objective of inventors and marine engineers ever since the Lusitania

Their device for reaching the ocean bed where lies the mighty liner is a deep sea elevator—a "steel-encased stairway" with an observation chamber near the lower end. The complementary apparatus recently tested in the

In the Lusitania project forty of these submarine lighting devices will be used, according to Mr. Lake's plans. The electrical connections of the lamps are inclosed in a rubber-covered cable. At the lamp junctions this is imbedded for further protection in a wooden block taping. As the pressure increases this becomes more and more water-

The expedition will carry a 200-kilowatt dynamo to the scene of operations to furnish the for the forty current lamps. Mr. Lake plans to have the submarine workers take these lamps right into the interior of the Lusitania.

The giant tube through which the divers of the Lake-Railey party will descend to the ocean floor will be connected with the mother ship on the surface. Plans for the date of the great ocean gold quest had not been announced at this writing, but Mr. Lake said he thought everything would be in readi ness the latter part of the forthcoming Summer.

In charge of the actual diving work will be Frank Crilley, who holds the deep-sea diving record. Mr. Crilley set this mark in 1915 off Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, while helping to raise the sunken submarine, F-S.

New recognition came to him in 1928 for his daring and brilliant achievements in connection with the raising of the S-4. Aiding Crilley in his work will be a group of the best divers in the world.

While the search is going on, Captain Railey will broadcast a radio description of the event. There is no doubt that the adventure will be the exciting underwater treasure quest that ever took place.

When the divers emerge from the great tube they will probably use dynamite to blow off what remains of the super-structure. This would give them readier access to those parts of the steamer where the treasure is stored. Like his fellow-hero, Jerry, ting Richard had been told by his parents to play by himself in the rear yard of the Buford dwelling. Little boys who do not do what they are told always get into trouble, his mother had pointed out on numerous occasions.

However this particular morning little Richard was feeling mighty good. "Who's afraid of an old well?" he probably asked himself. His mother was working inside of the house and the little boy thought this was a fine time to find just what strange creatures were down there in the hig hole that everybody seemed to be afraid of.

Richard ran out of the yard. He'd just take one little peek, he thought. He climbed up on the stone wall that surrounds the cistern and looked down. He could see nothing so he leaned over still more. Meanwhile his mother had come out

CIENCE is watching with fascinated bewilderment the strange case of pretty little Daisy Waller, 8, of Atlanta, Georgia.

Just what has been ailing Daisy it would take a very self-assured specialist to say. But her body appeared to be ossifying in the manner of those stony giant redwoods in the Far West.

Last February, Daisy came home from the Milton Avenue public school, where she was a pupil in the eighth grade. "Mummy, I feel funny," she complained to Mrs. Ima Waller, of 1126 Ridge Avenue. The mother undressed and examined Daisy. In one armpit Mrs. Waller found a small area of skin that had the hard cold irresponsiveness of actual granite. As the day wore on, this knot expanded, so the alarmed mother summoned an ambulance from Grady Hospital.

Gradually Daisy's cheeks, neck, shoulders and the upper part of her body began to be affected. When this was written the mysterious malady was beginning to attack the legs and thighs.

It all sounds pathetic and ghastly, but there is a ray of light in the darkness. Daisy feels no pain! "I feel all right," she said with a smile when sympathetic friends asked her how she was. One of the most peculiar phases of her malady was that she didn't run any temperature and other everyday symptoms of serious illness were lack-

What can be the mainspring of the malady? Many theories have been advanced by reputable medical men to account for it. Here are some of the hypotheses:

That the patient was suffering from calcification of the muscles; that she was a victim of mycitis osificous, which converts muscular tissue into bone (only 51 cases ever reported); that Daisy has chronic tetanus; that she has been poisoned by a spider's virulent bite, and that she has schleroderma, or chronic indurated skin disease, a condition that can be cured eventually.

More than one hundred physicians have studied the child's ailment since she entered the hospital. It is probable that Daisy's strange case will be brought to the attention of the Fulton County Medical So ciety at its next ses sion.

Meanwhile the cheer ful patient nodded her yellow head and smiled, with clear blue eyes, as she exclaimed, "Oh, 1 feel all right!" Daisy refuses, you see, to be downhearted.

VERYONE agreed that Sandra had taken it cautifully. Her rema that very first night when people knew that Larry had been let out was just like her. No-body had known whether to avoid the subject or to go ahead and grasp the nettle. So Oliver Wharton, who always trusted to a highly personal remark in times of social stress, told her that he'd never seen her look so well and Sandra answered, "Don't you think I'm going to be a credit to the breadline?"

All evening they called Sandra the best-dressed woman in the breadline. It was a good deal easier for everyone to make a joke out of it for obviously the situation was serious.

Of course the Chickerings had known it was coming. For two years that consolidation had been hanging over their heads. At first, when business was nor-mal, it had seemed as if it might mai, it had seemed as if it might not be a bad thing for Larry. He was a valuable man and he had a good record. But grad-ually it began to be clear that, as conditions were, there wasn't going to be enough room for both him and the Bates boys. It would have been all right as far as temperament and friendliness were concerned. No two young men of inherited fortunes could have been pleasanter or better fellows than Jack and Tod Bates. But Larry Chickering was a twenty-five-thousand-dollar-a-year man. That was the catch in the situation. If the Bates Timber Company took over Chelsea Lumber, which Larry had managed, they could hardly afford to keep him.

"But neither Jack nor Tod has half your brains," Sandra had said to her husband some months before. "I don't see how they can take over your business

Larry told her the truth as

"THERE isn't such a lot of business to take over. Their office hasn't any too much to do just now. They can absorb our company with practically no increase in overhead. They'll be a stronger outfit after they've consolidated with Chelcon." solidated with Chelsea.

"Which you've built up!" she exclaimed. *
"Well," said Larry, "of course they figure I've been pretty well paid for that as I went along." "Well," said Sandra, unconsciously taking the attitude in which Chilson had once painted her because he said she was meant to carry banners before an army, "in a way, I'm actually glad it happened. It gives you a chance to show everybody what you can do."

They had been married for ten years and for all those thou-sands of days Larry had thought his wife was the most attractive girl in the world. He had made her so happy that she hadn't even been distressed about passing the thirty-year-old mark last April. Everything they had, their popularity, their entertaining, their ambitions for the two children, had been built upon that fundamental loyalty.

"It is going to be kind of fun to be on my own." Larry agreed, "and with you back of me. I'll just clean up the world."

Yes, queer and untimely as it was, there was something exhilarating in that day when the consolidation was finally public Sandra had given her house the favorite arrangements of lights and flowers that put it at its hest and most homelike. She kept the children as gay as herself and they all gave Larry a rousing welcome when he came home. They had faced it without a quiver of alarm and Sandra had been wonderful.

"It's going to be a grand adshe said later that venture same night.

"Of course we'll have to cut expenses to the bone for a little while. "I expect to. I've thought that all out. I'm going to let Annie go and get a young cheap nursegirl. And I'm going to cut down the grocery bill. I was thinking too that it would be a good idea to put the big car in storage for a while. We don't need it. You know, I feel as if we were beginning all over again, Larry. I think this is going to bring us closer together."

"I believe it' is, darling," he

THAT remark had been made eight months ago and Sandra had found that it was her best It had come true prophecy. They were close together, almost too much so for comfort. But something had happened to the rest of her predictions. She was beginning to fear that, like that other Cassandra whose name she bore and used in part, she had lost the power of making other people believe them. She really didn't feel very sure of them herself these days.

SANDRA left the children in the little coupe and went up to the house by herself. She rang, and through the thin front door heard a man's voice as well as a woman's. Then Mrs. Mansfield came to let her in and as they went into the front room Sandra saw through the doorway that exposed the diningroom a man who hurriedly picked up a newspaper and disappeared toward the rear of the house. "My husband," said Mrs.

Mansfield with a kind of apology, "is just going out." The dressmaker took out the dresses Sandra had brought, with murmurs of pleasure. "Do you think you can fix them over so they'll fool people into believing they're this year's clothes?"

Maps, thought Sandra, in her reluctant parallel. Larry makes maps.

"We manage. It's always lucky when a women can help out. And our boys will be getting out of school soon now. One of them has a paper route already. Is that the way you'd like the skirt hung?"

THE rest of the talk was about clothes but as she went out to the waiting children, Sandra saw the man again. He walked along lazily as if time meant little to him. In spite of the fact that his face was kind and pleasant, the sight of it made Sandra uncomfortable.

Her own house had never seemed larger, more gracious or more dignified than when she went back to it. But it was deserted. Larry was not at home. Alice, who had promised to return to get dinner, had not come back. That made Sandra indignant, for she'd given the girl an extra afternoon off the week before. She'd have to be discharged and more dreary applicants in-terviewed. Sandra waited awhile, then got the children's supper and put them to bed. After that, Larry's dinner still loomed ahead and Alice did not appear. Sandra looked through the icebox and decided to make a party of the occasion. Her mind still ran along on the fact that Mrs. Mansfield was very gallant, to hang on to her shabby house and keep so cheerful. She certainly could do as well as that fragile faded dressmaker. She and Larry would be all right. If worse did come to the worst, it might not be too bad to make that third floor into an apart-ment temporarily. She was feeling very hopeful when Larry came in. "Sorry to be late," he began,

"I stopped at the Hartfords'." Anywhere else wouldn't have been so bad, she felt with a sudden rise of anger; but the whole crowd knew that Connie Hartford was always trying to get Larry interested.

"Oh," she said turning away from a kiss that had ceased to interest her, "so that's where you've been hanging around. I thought we were cutting out all that sort of thing."

"This was a special occasion." "Pretty special for me too. I was putting the children to bed and getting supper and wishing I had nine hands while you were enjoying yourself."

"It's nothing to get so tragic about," he said with an annoying good temper. "Something may come of this afternoon. Let me tell you."

"I worked for you for ten years." said Larry, "and everything I earned was yours, at your disposal. But I've never worked so hard as I have for these last eight months. Now you're getting to the point where you can't bear me around. You don't really want a husband, Sandra. You want a good substantial in-come. That's all."

He went out into the hall and picked up his hat and coat. She heard the door slam.

Let him go, she thought furiously, if that's the way he feels. But in the same second she was tortured by the thought of his leaving the house like a tramp. She'd driven him out like any common shrew and now where was he going?

It was nearly twelve o'clock when she heard the hushed voices of a man and a girl coming up the driveway and as a key turned in the lock of the back door she realized that it was probably her truant maid. Sandra went down to administer cold justice

"You told me you'd be back at five to get dinner," she began, "and this is nearly midnight."

The girl stood against the door. It was evident that she was afraid but she looked happy in spite of that. "I'm sorry, Mrs. Chickering."

"So am I. But you can't expect me to keep you after this."
Alice's face, which had always seemed to Sandra to be so still and uninteresting, was vivid

"Will you let me tell you how it was? It was because of my husband."

"Your husband?" Sandra spoke skeptically. "I thought you weren't married." Alice flushed like the dawn rising. "You never asked me outright. I said I was living with my father and I was then.

eren't together, Bill and I. He didn't have any work." "Was that why you left him?" Sandra knew that it wasn't her business but she suddenly wanted to know what this girl in a taw-

dry red coat did when her man was out of work. "No," said Alice and her eyes grew dark at the memory, wasn't just that he was out of work but I guess it started with that, all right. We were fine when he had a job. We had two rooms and a bath. Bill works for contractors. He always made good money. But he got laid off and of course we couldn't stay where we were. There wasn't any money coming in. It drove me crazy! I kind of got to think ing he wasn't any good. We had to give up our furniture. You hate to let your furniture go.' "Didn't he care?"

Alice gave her employer a look to see if Sandra deserved confidence and, meeting sympathy, she went on.

"A man hates to show it. Anyway, there wasn't anything he could do about it. After that he got to drinking." She amended that instantly, "Bill's not a felthat instantly. "Bill's not a fel-low who drinks, he really isn't He's always been steady. I guess I was after him all the time and other girls, you know, they'll cheer a man up. It isn't that I blame him! He tried to get work everywhere he could. But you can't see things at the time the way you do afterwards."

"No," agreed Sandra. "What's he doing now? "He's got a job," Alice spoke as of gold and power and happi-"It's a big piece of conness. struction work. Near Cincinnati. That's why I stayed away (Copyright 1933, The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

tonight. I was afraid if I telephoned you, you wouldn't let me stay. He's got to go tomorrow."

"Don't you go with him?" "It's a road job. I couldn't. But I thought if I could save what I make, maybe by spring he might find work in town or near enough to come home nights and we could get a room of our own again. I'd hate to lose my job here. You see, I need the money."

"Haven't you saved anything?"

"I had," said Alice, "but tonight-I needed it."

As clearly as if she had been told outright, Sandra knew how Bill had managed to get to Cincinnati.

"I don't blame you if you don't keep me. Only if I can stay on, I won't ask for any nights out for a long time. I'll make up the time."

Sandra was ashamed to let her plead like that.

"Why, of course you can stay. I like having you here. And-I'm glad about your husband."

She was glad that there was one happy woman in the house. She herself wasn't happy. In her own room she tried to put herself at peace. But there was no comfort to be had. She knew now that the thing that had made the house beloved was living in it with Larry, living happily. It wasn't the house itself, or their position, or getting back on a level with their friends, that were necessities. The thing ran deeper.

Suppose he didn't come back. Suppose she didn't have Alice's luck. She thought of Alice turning over all the money she'd earned these past months to her husband. She thought of Mrs. Mansfield sewing laboriously and being tolerant about the birdhouses. Both those women had done better than she had, in spite of all the praises she'd had. It was only when it hadn't really hurt that she'd been willing to stand up to trouble, only when adversity was drama and decoration that she was gay in facing

THEN she heard Larry, cautiously closing the front door, moving softly as if he hoped not to attract attention. There was a mixture of defiance and shrinking in his face as he saw her. tall and lovely in the blue satin pajamas of an expensive era, come down the stairs. That apprehensive look stopped Sandra short and she sat down on the first convenient step.

"I'm a very disagreeable woman," she remarked, "I wonder you stick it. You ought to leave me flat."

He came up to where she sat and put a hand on her shoulder. "Poor Sandra. I'm not quite bum enough to try anything like that. But I'm certainly not much good to you lately. I don't blame you."

"Nobody does any blaming but me." Sandra answered, "and I do it extensively. Why don't you turn on me? Why don't you blame me for all the money I've spent? Why don't you tell me I'm mean? I wouldn't even let you make those maps in peace."

"That was your mistake." He laughed at her. "They brought me luck. I didn't tell you because you wouldn't let me get it out. But the only reason I went to the Hartfords' today was because Jim Brail was here from Chicago and happened to be out there. He was pretty encouraging too: I'm to see him in the morning. But the thing that really got him going was my talk about maps. He's a nut on early American history."

Sandra stood up. She never cowered, even in apology, which was one reason why Larry loved "Listen. I'm really going to help," she told him. "There's no reason why this house shouldn't be made into apartments and earn its own way." "You'd hate the crowding."

"A lot of people," said Sandra, "live in a room or two. People no better than I. Women who love their husbands. Like me." The courage came back in his face.

"It will work out. Brail may have something for me. But even if he doesn't, I know, darling, that something is going to break for us soon-"

Sandra had again that look of carrying flying banners before a victorious army. But it wasn't because she was expecting the possible job. She was thinking that she must try to save what she had, even if nothing broke.

VERYONE agreed that Sandra had taken it cautifully. Her rema that very first night when people knew that Larry had been let out was just like her. Nobody had known whether to avoid the subject or to go ahead and grasp the nettle. So Oliver Wharton, who always trusted to a highly personal remark in times of social stress, told her that he'd never seen her look so well and Sandra answered, "Don't you think I'm going to be a credit to the breadline?"

All evening they called Sandra the best-dressed woman in the breadline. It was a good deal easier for everyone to make a joke out of it for obviously the situation was serious.

Of course the Chickerings had known it was coming. For two years that consolidation had been hanging over their heads. At first, when business was nor-mal, it had seemed as if it might not be a bad thing for Larry. He was a valuable man and he had a good record. But gradually it began to be clear that, as conditions were, there wasn't going to be enough room for both him and the Bates boys. It would have been all right as far as temperament and friendliness were concerned. No two young men of inherited fortunes could have been pleasanter or better fellows than Jack and Tod Bates. But Larry Chickering was a twenty-five-thousand-dollar-a-year man. That was the catch in the situation. If the Timber Company took Bates over Chelsea Lumber, which Larry had managed, they could hardly afford to keep him.

"But neither Jack nor Tod has half your brains," Sandra had said to her husband some months before. "I don't see how they can take over your business without you.

Larry told her the truth as

"THERE isn't such a lot of business to take over. Their office hasn't any too much to do just now. They can absorb our company with practically no increase in overhead. They'll be a atronger outfit after they've consolidated with Chelsea." 'Which you've built up!" she exclaimed. "Well," said Larry, "of course they figure I've been pretty well for that as I went along."

"Well," said Sandra, uncon-sciously taking the attitude in which Chilson had once painted her because he said she was meant to carry banners before an army, "in a way, I'm actually glad it happened. It gives you a chance to show everybody what you can do."

They had been married for ten years and for all"those thousands of days Larry had thought his wife was the most attractive girl in the world. He had made her so happy that she hadn't even been distressed about passing the thirty-year-old mark last April. Everything they had. their popularity, their entertaining, their ambitions for the two children, had been built upon that fundamental lovalty

"It is going to be kind of fun to be on my own," Larry agreed, and with you back of me, I'll just clean up the world.

Yes, queer and untimely as it on. was, there was something exhilarating in that day when the consolidation was finally public Sandra had given her house the favorite arrangements of lights and flowers that put it at its best and most homelike. She kept the children as gay as herself and they all gave Larry a rousing welcome when he came home. They had faced it without a quiver of alarm and Sandra had been wonderful.

'It's going to be a grand adventure," she said later that same night.

"Of course we'll have to cut expenses to the bone for a little while."

"I expect to. I've thought that all out. I'm going to let Annie go and get a young cheap nursegirl. And I'm going to cut down the grocery bill. I was thinking too that it would be a good idea to put the big car in storage for a while. We don't You know. I feel as if we were beginning all over again, Larry. I think this is going to bring us closer together.

THAT remark had been made L eight months ago and Sandra had found that it was her best prophecy. It had come true. They were close together, almost too much so for comfort. They would be living, all of them, on her money pretty soon. Food, clothes-she was reminded that she had arranged to go out to see a dressmaker this afternoon. The maid six years. But of course they've was going out but Sandra decided that she could put the children in the car and take them

She went upstairs wishing that she could forget what someone had said the other day about the possibility of making the house over into three apartments. She wouldn't even consider such a thing of course.

She gathered up the clothes she was going to take to the dressmaker. Many of them were ones she had thought she was through with and she wasn't at all sure how successful their remaking would be. She put the most possible ones in a box, hoping that the dressmaker was clever. All she knew about Mrs. Mansfield was that she was cheap and needed work.

Mrs. Mansfield's house was one of many in a recently developed suburb. Its lot was narrow, its paint anemic.

SANDRA left the children in the little coupe and went up to the house by herself. rang, and through the thin front door heard a man's voice as well as a woman's. Then Mrs. Mansfield came to let her in and as they went into the front room Sandra saw through the doorway that exposed the diningroom a man who hurriedly picked up a newspaper and disappeared toward the rear of the house.

"My husband," said Mrs. Mansfield with a kind of apology, "is just going out." The dressmaker took out the dresses Sandra had brought, with murmurs of pleasure. "Do you think you can fix them over so they'll fool people into believing they're this year's clothes?" "I'm sure I can." Sandra liked her. She was cooperative and interested and, best of all, admiring. They tried one dress after another and made plans. And after so much admiration had been given her Sandra had an impulse to re-

"This is such a pleasant room," she said. "A house needs so much done to it," the dressmaker answered,

Sandra did no probing. But she knew when she was on the edge of confidence and was not surprised when Mrs. Mansfield went on, "You see, my husband's been out of work for some time."

"What was his business?" "He was a musician." spoke now with a touch of pride 'First violin at the Doric for all got mechanical orchestras now.

"Couldn't he do some other kind of work?' "He would. He's not particusaid Sandra. "Yes. You get sorry for a man who's walking around all day looking for work. Sandra had a painful feeling of knowing about all this.

"They tell him to come back next week, and when he goes there's nothing for him. It makes a man lose heart. How can you

How indeed, thought Sandra guiltily. "I suppose it worries you too, Mrs. Mansfield."

"Well," the dressmaker answered. "I always say there couldn't be a better husband than Joe. Joe does what he can. He tries to help about the house though I tell him that more often than not he gets in my way. He's quite a hand for making bird-houses too and it keeps him busy."

Maps, thought Sandra, in her reluctant parallel. Larry makes maps.

"We manage. It's always lucky when a women can help out. And our boys will be getting out of school soon now. One of them has a paper route al-Is that the way you'd like the skirt hung?"

THE rest of the talk was about I clothes but as she went out to the waiting children, Sandra saw the man again. He walked along lazily as if time meant little to him. In spite of the fact that his face was kind and pleasant, the sight of it made Sandra uncomfortable. Her own house had never seemed larger, more gracious or more dignified than when she went back to it. But it was deserted. Larry was not at home. Alice, who had promised to return to get dinner, had not come back. That made Sandra indignant, for she'd given the girl an extra afternoon off the week before. She'd have to be discharged and more dreary applicants interviewed. Sandra waited awhile, then got the children's supper and put them to bed. After that, Larry's dinner still loomed ahead and Alice did not appear. Sandra looked through the icebox and decided to make a party of the occasion. Her mind still ran along on the fact that Mrs. Mansfield was very gallant, to hang on to her shabby house and keep so cheerful. She certainly could do as well as that fragile faded dressmaker. She and Larry would be all right. If worse did come to the worst, it might not be too bad to make that third floor into an apartment temporarily. She was feeling very hopeful when Larry came in. 'Sorry to be late," he began, "I stopped at the Hartfords'."

Anywhere else wouldn't have been so bad, she felt with a sudden rise of anger; but the whole crowd knew that Connie Hartford was always trying to get Larry interested.

"Oh," she said turning away from a kiss that had ceased to interest her, "so that's where you've been hanging around. thought we were cutting out all that sort of thing.

"This was a special occasion." "Pretty special for me too. I was putting the children to bed and getting supper and wishing I had nine hands while you were enjoying yourself."

"It's nothing to get so tragic about," he said with an annoying good temper. "Something may come of this afternoon. Let me tell you.'

"I'm fed up with that kind of talk. You just hang around and leave things to me. There must be work.

"I worked for you for ten years," said Larry, "and every. thing I earned was yours, at your disposal. But I've never worked so hard as I have for these last eight months. Now you're getting to the point where you can't bear me around. You don't really want a husband, Sandra You want a good substantial income. That's all.

Let him go, she thought furiously, if that's the way he feels. But in the same second she was tortured by the thought of his leaving the house like a tramp. She'd driven him out like any common shrew and now where was he going?

It was nearly twefve o'clock when she heard the hushed voices of a man and a girl coming up the driveway and as a key turned in the lock of the back door she realized that it was probably her truant maid. Sandra went down to administer cold justice. "and this is nearly mid-

"Was that why you left him?" Sandra knew that it wasn't her business but she suddenly wanted to know what this girl in a tawdry red coat did when her man was out of work.

"No," said Alice and her eyes grew dark at the memory, "it wasn't just that he was out of work but I guess it started with We were fine that, all right. when he had a job. We had two rooms and a bath. Bill works for contractors. He always made good money. But he got laid off and of course we couldn't stay where we were. There wasn't any money coming in. It drove me crazy! I kind of got to thinking he wasn't any good. We had to give up our furniture. hate to let your furniture go." "Didn't he care?"

Alice gave her employer a look to see if Sandra deserved confidence and, meeting sympathy, she went on.

"A man hates to show it. Anyway, there wasn't anything he could do about it. After that he got to drinking." She amended that instantly. "Bill's not a fellow who drinks, he really isn't. He's always been steady. I guess I was after him all the time and other girls, you know, they'll cheer a man up. It isn't that I blame him! He tried to get work everywhere he could. But you can't see things at the time the way you do afterwards." "No," agreed Sandra. "What's he doing now? "He's got a job," Alice spoke as of gold and power and happi-"It's a big piece of con-on work. Near Cincinstruction work.

tonight. I was afraid if I telephoned you, you wouldn't let me stay. He's got to go tomorrow."

"Don't you go with him?" "It's a road job. I couldn't. But I thought if I could save what I make, maybe by spring he might find work in town or near enough to come home nights and we could get a room of our own again. I'd hate to lose my job here. You see, I need the money."

"Haven't you saved anything?"

"I had," said Alice, "but tonight-I needed it."

As clearly as if she had been told outright, Sandra knew how Bill had managed to get to Cincinnati.

"I don't blame you if you don't keep me. Only if I can stay on, I won't ask for any nights out for a long time. I'll make up the time."

Sandra was ashamed to let her plead like that.

'Why, of course you can stay. I like having you here. And-I'm glad about your husband."

She was glad that there was one happy woman in the house. She herself wasn't happy. In her own room she tried to put herself at peace. But there was no comfort to be had. She knew now that the thing that had made the house beloved was living in it with Larry, living happily. It wasn't the house itself, or their position, or getting back on a level with their friends, that were necessities. The thing ran deeper. Suppose he didn't come back. Suppose she didn't have Alice's luck. She thought of Alice turning over all the money she'd earned these past months to her husband. She thought of Mrs. Mansfield sewing laboriously and being tolerant about the birdhouses. Both those women had done better than she had, in spite of all the praises she'd had. It was only when it hadn't really hurt that she'd been willing to stand up to trouble, only when adversity was drama and decora-He went out into the han and tion that she was gay in facing

> THEN she heard Larry, cau-I tiously closing the front door, moving softly as if he hoped not to attract attention. There was a mixture of defiance and shrinking in his face as he saw her, tall and lovely in the blue satin pajamas of an expensive era, come down the stairs. That apprehensive look stopped Sandra short and she sat down on the first convenient step.

"I'm a very disagreeable wom-"You told me you'd be back an," she remarked. "I wonder you stick ft. You ought to leave me flat."

> He came up to where she sat and put a hand on her shoulder. "Poor Sandra. I'm not quite bum enough to try anything like that. But I'm certainly not much good to you lately. I don't blame you." "Nobody does any blaming but me," Sandra answered, "and I do it extensively. Why don't you turn on me? Why don't you blame me for all the money I've spent? Why don't you tell me I'm mean? I wouldn't even let you make those maps in

"That was your mistake." He laughed at her. "They brought me luck. I didn't tell you because you wouldn't let me get it out. But the only reason I went to the Hartfords' today was because Jim Brail was here from Chicago and happened to be out there. He was pretty encouraging too; I'm to see him in the morning. But the thing that really got him going was my talk about maps. He's a nut on early American history."

Sandra stood up. She never cowered, even in apology, which was one reason why Larry loved

"Listen. I'm really going to help," she told him. "There's no reason why this house shouldn't be made into apartments and earn its own way."

"You'd hate the crowding." "A lot of people," said Sandra, "live in a room or two. People no better than I. Women who love their husbands. Like me."

The courage came back in his "It will work out. Brail may have something for me. But even if he doesn't, I know, darling, that something is going to break for us soon-" Sandra had again that look of earrying flying banners before a victorious army. But it wasn't because she was expecting the possible job. She was thinking that she must try to save what she had, even if nothing broke.

Let Your Refrigerator Do the Work

Before Going Out for a Round of Golf the Home Manager POTATO SALAD IN May Prepare an Entire Luncheon for the Guests She Is Bringing Back With Her Having Ample Space in Refrigerator to Store the Dishes Which Are Ready-to-Heat as Soon as She Returns.

TOWADAYS, you who are home managers, usually have programs that vary widely with the day, programs that challenge your executive ability in dispatching the housework without fuss or flurry, particularly when you have only part-time help. You may be having friends for luncheon some day when the garden may need attention, or when an unexpected meeting or shopping trip takes you away from the house the greater part of the morning. Or you may be one of those busy business women who look forward to a restful dinner at home.

In any event, you can save time by having a daily plan of work outlined a few days ahead; any necessary changes may be made just after breakfast each

In making up daily schedules, you will often find it convenient to plan meals that may, for the most part, be prepared right after breakfast and put into the refrigerator, ready to be cooked or served. To do this, however, you should have ample room in your refrigerator. The service a refrigerator can give is so important that it is economical to have space enough in the food compartment, not only for all the perishable foods you wish to store there, but also for meals prepared in advance—whenever town those in the re frigerator until it is time to cook and serve them. There should also be room for chilling drinks, salads, cold desserts, and other dishes that are served cold. If you are considering the purchase of a new refrigerator, it will pay you to choose one that is large enough to meet all these needs. On this page we have shown in one of the refrigerators the fol-lowing luncheon that was pre-pared early in the forenoon.

Baked Chicken Loaf Creamed Celery an Gratin Sized Tomatoes Strawberry Short Cake Coffee

The chicken loaf may be baked and served cold, or it may be prepared and put in the casserole or baking dish ready to bake and serve hot. The tomatoes may be served as a relish or salad marinated with French dressing. The creamed celery is ready to re-heat, and the individual shortcakes may be ready to hake, or the dry ingredients sifted ready to be mixed into a dough. The strawberries are in a covered howl ready for the shortcake. Some of the recipes are given on this page.

The following menu is simple to prepare in the morning and may be used as a luncheon or a dinner. Recipes for the casserois and fruit cup are given on this

Two tablespoonsful of chopped chives are added to the cream sauce for the beans. Finely-minced onion may also be used. The cream sauce is the same as that served with the creamed celery.

Before Going Out for a Round of Golf the Home Manager May Prepare an Entire Luncheon for the Guests She Is Bringing Back With Her Having Ample Space in Refrigerator to Store the Dishes Which Are Ready-to-Heat as OWADAYS, you who are have programs that vary widely with the day, programs that challenge your executive and add a dressing made of the ability in dispatching the housework without fuss or flurry, particularly when you have only part-time help. You may be having friends for luncheon some day when the garden may need attention, or when an unexpected meeting or shopping trip takes you away from the house the greater part of the morning. Or you may be one of those busy business women who look forward to a restful dinner at home.

In any event, you can save time by having a daily plan of work outlined a few days ahead; any necessary changes may be made just after breakfast each

In making up daily schedules, you will often find it convenient to plan meals that may, for the most part, be prepared right after breakfast and put into the refrigerator, ready to be cooked or served. To do this, however, you should have ample room in your refrigerator. The service a refrigerator can give is so important that it is economical to have space enough in the food compartment, not only for all the perishable foods you wish to store there, but also for meals prepared in advance-whenever you wish to store these in the refrigerator until it is time to cook and serve them. There should also be room for chilling drinks, salads, cold desserts, and other dishes that are served cold. If you are considering the purchase of a new refrigerator, it will pay you to choose one that is large enough to meet all these needs. On this page we have shown in one of the refrigerators the following luncheon that was prepared early in the forenoon.

Baked Chicken Loaf Creamed Celery au Gratin Sliced Tomatoes Strawberry Short Cake Coffee

The chicken loaf may be baked and served cold, or it may be prepared and put in the casserole or baking dish ready to bake and serve hot. The tomatoes may be served as a relish or salad marinated with French dressing. The creamed celery is ready to re-heat, and the individual shortcakes may be ready to bake, or the dry ingredients sifted ready to be mixed into a dough. The strawberries are in a covered bowl ready for the shortcake. Some of the recipes are given on this page.

The following menu is simple to prepare in the morning and may be used as a luncheon or a dinner. Recipes for the casserole and fruit cup are given on this

Shrimp and Vegetable Casserole Green Fea Sauce
Cucumber and Radish Salad
Lime and Strawberry Cup
Nut Cookles Coffee

In the following menu cooked potatoes are sliced, and just before they are put on the broiler with the well-seasoned Hamburg cakes or the steak, they are brushed with melted fat. Two tablespoonsful of chopped chives are added to the cream sauce for the beans. Finely-minced onion may also be used. The cream sauce is the same as that served with the creamed celery.

standards that insure satisfactory . service, we suggest that you make certain, in selecting a new refrigerator, that it carries the Seal of Approval of Good Housekeeping Institute. Or send for the list of refrigerators that we have approved.

For convenience the refrigerator should, of course, be installed in the kitchen. If it stands beside the kitchen cabinet, you have a complete storage and work-table unit, with the groceries at hand on the cabinet shelves and the perishable foods

All food should be kept covered in the refrigerator, and for this purpose there is a widening variety of choice in refrigerator dishes, jugs, and bottles. Some of these are illustrated here. For covering bowls, there are parchment and waxed paper, transparent tissue, and aluminum foil. Plan to use as soon as possible any food left over from a meal. Bits of left-over food, tucked away in the refrigerator in a thrifty moment, quickly accumulate and take up much space; and
